FRANKLIN TYPOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY

THE FRANKLIN TYPOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY was organized in 1824 by a number of active, zealous printers, who, as stated in the preamble to the Constitution soon after adopted, entertained "a due sense of the importance of cultivating a spirit of benevolence among the members of the profession," and were "convinced of the utility of well-constituted societies for mutual aid, in promoting the enlargement of the social affections, and mitigating the sufferings attendant upon sickness and misfortune."

For the purpose of adding to the stability of the institution, an act of incorporation was obtained from the Legislature of Massachusetts in 1825.

Since its organization, now more than seventy-five years ago, the Society has uninterruptedly continued its existence, with varying success, but at all times has closely adhered to the original purposes of its founders.

The splendid record which the Society has made for itself, during its long existence, has won for it many friends, who have commended its noble work and materially assisted in carrying it on. To the general public the Society is little known, and frequently confounded with other organizations of an entirely different character. It has therefore been deemed advisable to issue a statement of the general purposes of the Society, together with an account of the work it is now doing and what it has accomplished in the past.

2 A Few Facts Relating to the

BRIEFLY TOLD

The following summary will show at a glance the leading features of the Society : —

✓ The Franklin Typographical Society is not a trade union ; it has no disputes with employers in any branch of the profession from which its membership is derived. The sole purpose of the members is to carry out the provisions of its Constitution, to the end that dependent members shall receive the utmost benefit provided for therein.

It is not a secret organization.

It is conducted on most economical principles, so far as relates to salaries and other essential expenses. It has but two salaried officers, the Secretary and the Collector ; the former receives for his services twenty-five dollars per year, and the latter thirty-five dollars per year, a total of only sixty dollars, with a membership of over 400, exclusive of the Honorary list.

There is no limit to the number of weeks sick members may draw benefits. One member received continuous benefits from February, 1883, to the time of his death in May, 1898.

Members unable to earn a livelihood by reason of old age are entitled to benefits. There are at present on the list of beneficiaries three over seventy years of age and two over eighty.

Of the present sick-list, one has been drawing benefits since April, 1892, and is nearly eighty-six years of age ; one since November, 1892, who is nearly eighty-five years old ; one since August, and one since September, 1894; one since April, 1895; and four others, incurable, who have been on the list between two and three years, three of whom are over seventy years of age.

The amount paid in sick and death benefits since the Society was organized is $68,556.05. Of this sum $7,394.05 was paid during the first fifty years, and $61,162 during the last twenty-five years.

The smallest total amount paid during any one year was five dollars in 1824. The largest was $4,628 in 1894. The average sum per year for the past twenty-five years was $2,446.50.

The amount paid per week for sick benefits is either four or five dollars, as the funds may permit.

The receipts from active membership fees and dues are only sufficient to pay about two-thirds of the annual demands for sick benefits at the present time. The balance comes from interest on Standing Funds and donations.

The Society has Standing Funds amounting to $20,872.55, of which the interest only can be used.

Donations have been received from nearly all the master printers of Boston, from several lady friends, and from some of our public men.

The Society has a library of over three thousand volumes, among which are a number of rare books relating to the art of printing, and some unique specimens of workmanship of fifty and a hundred years ago. This library is well patronized by the members, and is constantly being added to, and contributions of books are solicited.

Free beds at the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Homœopathic Hospital are controlled by the Society, and are always open to members.

4 A Few Facts Relating to the

Since 1889 the Society has held its meetings in the building owned by it, known as Franklin Hall, No. 121 Chandler Street, and the item of hall rent has ceased to swell the yearly outgo.

The Franklin Typographical Society and Boston Typographical Union No. 13 jointly own a large burial lot in Mount Hope Cemetery.

ACTIVE MEMBERSHIP

Any printer, pressman, stereotyper, or electrotyper, or any other person in any way connected with the printing business, whether employer or employee, between the ages of twenty-one and forty-five years, and known to be in good health, may be admitted a member of the Society on receiving three-fourths of the ballots cast.

Candidates for membership must be proposed by a member, in writing, stating age, residence, and place of business, with three references; said proposition is referred to an Investigating Committee. A fee of five dollars must accompany the application; said sum to be returned to the member making the proposal should the same be acted upon unfavorably, or deducted from the initiation fee if the candidate is elected and presents himself for qualification within six months from the date of his election, but said sum is forfeited to the Society should he fail to appear within that time, the election becoming void.

The active membership fee is graduated as follows: For persons between the ages of twenty-one and thirty years, twelve dollars; between thirty and thirty-five, fifteen dollars; between thirty-five and forty, eighteen dollars; between forty and forty-five, twenty-four dollars: payable upon signing the Constitution.

Franklin Typographical Society 5

The regular assessments are six dollars a year, payable quarterly, on the first days of January, April, July, and October.

Neglect to pay the regular assessments for six months subjects the delinquent to forfeiture of benefits for three months after payment, and loss of membership is the penalty for failure to pay for one year.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP

By a provision in the Constitution any person, whether connected with the printing business or not, may become an Honorary Member, upon proposition and ballot, the candidate receiving three-fourths of the ballots cast, and paying into the treasury a sum not less than ten dollars.

Honorary Members are entitled to the privileges of the library, but are not entitled to benefits in case of sickness, and they are not subject to assessments.

This provision has been availed of by a large number of publishers, master-printers, and others more or less intimately associated with the craft (and also by some generous-spirited men and women not connected with the printing business), who have thus, without taking any active part, manifested an interest in the existence, welfare, and importance of the Society.

The money obtained from this source is placed in a Standing Fund known as the Honorary Members' Fund, only the interest of which can be used for the purposes of the Society.

BENEFITS

Every member, properly qualified, in case of sickness or disability preventing him from earning a livelihood

6 A Few Facts Relating to the

at the printing or any other business, is entitled to the sum of five dollars per week, commencing on the eighth day from the date of such sickness or disability, except it be shown that the same arises from improper or immoral conduct; provided, however, that the sum paid per week may be reduced to four dollars when the surplus over the Standing Funds in the hands of the Treasurer is less than fifteen hundred dollars.

Assessments are not demanded of a member while receiving benefits.

All that is required of a sick member that he may receive benefits is, that he shall not be, or have been within three months, indebted to the Society for six months' assessments, and that he shall give notice to the Secretary within one week from the commencement of his sickness; or, in the event of absence from Boston, he is required to notify the Society within fourteen days thereafter, in writing, properly certified, addressed to the Secretary; also to continue to report himself in the same manner, once a month, previous to the first Thursday of each month, as long as he may remain sick.

Upon the death of a member entitled to benefits the sum of seventy-five dollars is appropriated, and, if necessary, immediately paid to the widow or other representative of the heirs of the deceased member.

Thus it will be seen that for a trivial sum, amounting to but little more than two cents per diem, any person obtaining membership in this Society provides an income during a period of sickness which, though not large in amount, is liberal considering the outlay, and would be, in most cases, of incalculable benefit at such a time.

THE LIBRARY

At an early period of the existence of this association a library was established, and every effort has since been made to continue the same commensurate with the growth of the Society. It now numbers over three thousand volumes, and embraces many of the most popular works of history, biography, fiction and poetry, besides books of practical value and miscellaneous interest, and is receiving constant accessions by purchases and donations.

Members are entitled to receive four books per month for eleven months in the year; and notwithstanding the multiplication of public libraries within recent years, and the consequent increased facilities for obtaining reading matter, there is no falling off in the call for books at the library, which indeed is an important feature of the Society. There are yet some vacant shelves, and additions to its catalogue are always welcome.

PRINTERS' BURIAL LOT

This Society and the Typographical Union No. 13 are the joint owners of a lot in Mount Hope Cemetery, purchased for the purpose of providing a place of burial for deceased members of either Society, or printers not otherwise provided for. The lot is No. 541 Mount Hope Avenue, contains 1496 square feet, is enclosed in a substantial iron fence and ornamented by a marble obelisk 17 feet 6 inches in height. The whole expense was about $1,300, over $1,000 having been raised by subscription. The lot was dedicated in 1860, and is under the supervision of the two Societies.

8 A Few Facts Relating to the

This lot has now but few vacancies, and as there is a constant demand for burial places for members of the craft without friends in the city, a new lot is a necessity, and should be provided in the near future.

FUNDS OF THE SOCIETY

The Standing Funds of the Society consist of the Regular Fund, which is the receptacle of the moneys that have from time to time reached the Society from other sources than its membership, together with such small amounts as the Society has been able to save from its regular income.

One of the first, if not the first, to contribute to the Society funds was Isaiah Thomas, who, in answer to a letter of invitation to meet with the Society at its first anniversary in 1825, congratulates the Society upon its organization, regrets that the infirmities of age (he being seventy-six years old on January 19, 1825) prevent his making the long journey from Worcester to Boston in the middle of winter, and in a postscript says, "I enclose ten dollars to be appropriated as the Society please." Dr. Thomas in his will bequeathed $100 to the Society, and this sum was paid to its President in 1832.

Among the correspondence on the files of the Society are several letters written to Treasurer Lillie (1837-1865) and signed "A Friend of the Society," contributing sums of five and ten dollars, requesting that acknowledgment of the same be made in the "Advertiser," "Atlas," or "Journal." Another from one of the Active Members of 1858 returned $48.50 that had been voted him for benefits, as he thought it "may be instrumental in relieving some brother typo who may be less fortunate than myself." (This act has been duplicated many times by other members in the past seventy-five years.) Still another letter, bearing date of January 1, 1859, and addressed to Treasurer Lillie, says that remarks in the newspapers "relative to the Franklin Typographical Society remind me of days long since passed away. Some of the most amiable and intelligent men whom I have known have been amongst the members of this truly excellent association; and as a testimonial of the high regard in which I hold your institution, both in a charitable and literary view, permit me through your agency to forward the enclosed sum in aid of its funds." Signed, "One of the Craft." This letter is endorsed by Treasurer Lillie, "Letter accompanying donation of $500." Up to the present time the Society is not aware from whom it came.

The Honorable Edward Everett, by request, on January 17, 1860, delivered a lecture in Music Hall, Boston, for the benefit of the Franklin Typographical Society, and the net proceeds (nearly $400) found lodgement in the Regular Fund. Mr. Everett declined any compensation. A half-length oil portrait of this famous orator, scholar, and statesman, received from the Eastburn estate, adorns the Society's hall.

Many and various other amounts, resulting from individual effort of members of the Society, singly or as entertainment committees, have helped to swell the Regular Fund. There is also incorporated in it $1,000 bequeathed the Society by John H. Wilkins; a legacy of $300 from Miss Catharine A. P. Lillie, a sister of Thomas J. Lillie, so long Treasurer of the Society; $1,000 left to the Society by the will of Oliver Ditson; the legacy of $1,000, which is the first item of the will of Luther Colby; the Sawyer

10 A Few Facts Relating to the

Fund of $2,000, made up of two items, — the first being $1,000 bequeathed to the Society by Nathan Sawyer, the second, of $1,000 also, coming as a gift from his son, Henry N. Sawyer; and the contribution of the Master Printers' Club of Boston, which was received on Franklin Night, January 17, 1899.

This Regular Fund was the especial care of Treasurer Lillie, during whose twenty-nine years of active and unceasing oversight are numbered those perilous times in the Society's history when its dissolution was often agitated; and no "nimble sixpence" once lodged by him with the Society's funds ever again wandered abroad with the vagrant shilling of frivolity or extravagance, but still performs its full duty in helping to provide an income for the Society. The fund now amounts to nearly $11,000.

The Eastburn Fund of $5,782.65, bequeathed to the Society by John H. Eastburn, is a separate fund, as is also

The Joy Fund of $3,000 contributed by the executors of the will of Nabby Joy.

The Honorary Members' Fund of $1,265 is the accumulated fees for Honorary Membership in the Society, and its list of contributors contains the names of many who are as keenly interested in the Society's welfare as are any of its Active Members.

The financial exhibit on page eleven gives an outline of the work of the "Franklin" for the past twenty-five years, and shows a steady gain in Standing Funds during that period. Attention is called to the fact that though the work of the Society has greatly increased, the expense of carrying on its work has not materially changed, and the cost to the Society for paying out a dollar of relief is but a few cents.

A WORD TO THE CRAFT

Notwithstanding the peculiar adaptability of this institution to the place it was intended to fill, with its manifest advantages in its particular sphere over any accident, health, or life insurance plan, and the constant demand made upon the craft for the aid of the unfortunate as well as improvident among the disciples of the "art preservative" and its adjuncts, the membership of the Society, though now standing at its best, has never attained the dimensions its founders had a right to expect, or its merits and faithful service abundantly deserve.

The late John H. Eastburn, a worthy printer of Boston, whose munificent bequest of nearly six thousand dollars and a free bed at the Massachusetts General Hospital has been of inestimable value to the Society in its relief work, recognizing the benefits which members of his guild receive from various representative societies, said in his will: "This legacy is given to mark my esteem for the members of the printing profession, the art preservative of all arts, and also to offer inducements to every member of the profession in the city of Boston and its vicinity to join the Society."

In view of this and the many other inducements which the Society offers, it seems strange that only a small number of the members of the craft have availed themselves of the privileges of this venerable and worthy organization. Every man in Boston and vicinity, eligible to membership, should be proud to have his name inscribed on its rolls. It will promote his material welfare; it will be his friend in the time of need.

Franklin Typographical Society 13

A glance at the list of members and the roll of past officers will show that some of the leading citizens of Boston have taken an active interest in the work of the Society ; and knowing the good it has done, and the honorable place it fills in the community, many of them have contributed liberally to its support.

The sick-list of the past few years has been very large, and has drawn heavily upon the resources of the Society. For this reason the weekly benefits — usually five dollars — have been reduced to four dollars during the past two years. The demands upon the treasury have kept pace with the increase of funds, and but for the timely assistance of friends the relief work would have been greatly reduced.

The voluntary contribution of the Master Printers' Club of Boston at the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Society, and their promises for the future, will be a great help in this direction. With larger means at its command, the Society could easily enlarge the sphere of its usefulness and do much more than has yet been attempted. By the introduction of linotype machines in newspaper offices, large numbers of compositors — especially those advanced in years — have been thrown out of employment, or at best are able to get but two or three days' work each week. Many of these have been unable to provide a competence for the proverbial rainy day, and will require aid when they become too old to help themselves. The Franklin Typographical Society will do all it can to relieve cases of this kind ; but in its present financial condition, and considering the large amount it is paying each year for the relief of sick members, it cannot do as much in this direction as should be done. The addition of a few thousand dollars to the Society's funds would greatly help this work.

14 A Few Facts Relating to the Money given to the Franklin Typographical Society is used only for the purpose for which it has been contributed. It is one of the most economically conducted societies in existence. It spends none of its money for banquets; it has no high-salaried officers; its work is performed as a labor of love. Less than two hundred dollars a year pays its entire management expenses. A dollar added to its funds will produce one hundred cents worth of relief.

Any one desiring to aid the Society in its work may address the Treasurer, Leonard Raymond, 22 Mountain Avenue, Somerville, Mass., to whom all contributions should be sent.

FORM OF BEQUEST TO THE Franklin Typographical Society
I give, devise, and bequeath to the FRANKLIN TYPOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, in the City of Boston, and State of Massachusetts, the sum of

FRIENDS AND BENEFACTORS

Isaiah Thomas, mentioned as one of the first donors of the Society, was born in Boston in 1749, and died in Worcester, April 4, 1831, aged 82. He was a distinguished printer, publisher, and author of his time; a participant in the Lexington-Concord battle, April 19, 1775, and a patriot so ardent and outspoken that the atmosphere of Boston became oppressive, causing him to remove to Worcester, where he established the "Worcester Spy," which is still published; an antiquarian of note, and founder of the American Antiquarian Society, of which he was president and most liberal patron. For his services in the cause of letters received the degree of LL.D. from the Alleghany College of Pennsylvania, and maintained through life a character distinguished for integrity, patriotism, and philanthropy. He was elected an Honorary Member in 1825.

John H. Wilkins, by whose will the Society profited to the extent of $1,000, died December 5, 1861. He was the founder of the paper business now known as the Rice-Kendall Company, and was a prominent figure in the State, City, and religious life of Boston for many years before his death, but was not connected with the Franklin Typographical Society.

John H. Eastburn was a Bostonian by birth. Early left fatherless, he was apprenticed at the age of fifteen to Major Ben Russell of the "Columbian Centinel," with whom he remained until his majority in 1826, when he began the business career that ended only with his death. Possessing a strong love for his profession of a printer, diligent, honorable, and with strict integrity, he was enabled to say in his later years: "Though my early life was one of unwearied labor and perseverance, my after life has been blest — thanks be to God — with an ample fortune and good health." For thirty-seven years he was City Printer of Boston, and his imprint appeared on the best book and job printing in New England. It is said that Daniel Webster, after a growl over the style of work executed by Washington printers, which had been favorably compared with that of Caxton and Franklin, remarked: "Caxton and Franklin were great men, but they are dead. I do not despise the meanest of their productions, but I want printing such as honest John Eastburn whisks from his tympan." An oil portrait of Mr. Eastburn hangs in Franklin Hall, a companion to that of his friend, Edward Everett, and it is a constant reminder of as fine a specimen of a self-made man as ever sprung from New England stock. Though the Franklin Typographical Society benefited largely by his will, Mr. Eastburn was never enrolled upon its membership list.

Oliver Ditson, the well-known music publisher, joined the Society as an Active Member in 1832, and was its President in 1835. He withdrew from Active Membership in 1836, but was a frequent contributor to the funds during his life. He became an Honorary Member in 1874. He bequeathed the Society one thousand dollars.

Nathan Sawyer joined this Society in 1844 as an Active Member, but retired from the Active list in 1850 and became an Honorary Member in 1885. He was the founder and head of the printing business known as Nathan Sawyer & Son. Mr. Henry N. Sawyer, who was associated with his father, still continues the business under the old name. He is also an Honorary Member of the Society, and is actively interested in its welfare.

Luther Colby, editor of the "Banner of Light," was a warm friend of the "Franklin," and had been an Honorary Member since 1872. The first item of his will reads: "First, to the Franklin Typographical Society of Boston, of which Society I have been an Honorary Member for a number of years, I give the sum of One Thousand Dollars." (The Massachusetts Inheritance Law is accountable for fifty dollars of this legacy that the Society did not get.)

Nabby Joy was born in Boston, and was the daughter of John and Abigail Joy. Her father owned a large amount of real estate on Beacon Hill, his property comprising a part of that formerly held by John Singleton Copley. Joy Street was named for her father. She lived at 32 Mount Vernon Street, and died there on July 30, 1869, aged 78 years and 6 months. In her will, after bequests to relatives, she directed that the executors should give the residue, which amounted to nearly $100,000, to charitable organizations. The aims and objects of the Franklin Typographical Society having been presented to the executors, they gave to it the sum of $3,000, with the express condition that the interest only should be used by the Society, and that it should be known as the "Joy Fund."

Stephen N. Stockwell, whose bequest of a free bed in the Homœopathic Hospital is of so much benefit to the members of the Society, was born at Hardwick, Mass., August 31, 1823. His parents moved to Worcester, Mass., when he was but a few months old, and his early days were passed in that city. From the time of his majority until his death at Hillside, Roxbury, April 8, 1881, his life was almost wholly identified with Boston and the "Boston Journal," where he filled nearly all the intermediate positions from compositor to editor-in-chief with rare ability and unsurpassed fidelity. A portrait of Mr. Stockwell, presented to the Society by his widow, has a place in Franklin Hall. He was never a member of the Society.

Franklin Typographical Society 17

In the death of John K. Rogers of the Boston Type Foundry, this Society lost one of its most interested Honorary Members. He was ever ready in word and deed to further its interests, and seemed to consider it an especial favor to be allowed to contribute a check for the benefit of its treasury.

Hon. Hugh O'Brien was born in Ireland ; when five years of age, he came with his parents to this country, and received his education in the public schools of Boston, graduating from the Boylston School on Fort Hill ; in his twelfth year he entered the office of the " Boston Courier " to learn the printing trade, and from thence to the book and job office of Tuttle, Dennett & Chisholm, of which he became foreman at an early age. Several years later he joined a copartnership which established the " Shipping and Commercial List," of which he was the editor. His public career began in 1875, when he was elected to the Board of Aldermen ; was re-elected in 1876, 1877, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1883, and was chairman of the board during the last four years of his service ; for four years, 1885-1888, inclusive, he was mayor of the city. He joined the Franklin Typographical Society in 1844 ; was its President in 1850, and Treasurer in 1871 and until his decease, August 1, 1895 ; he was proud of his office, constantly assuring the Society of this at the repeated annual elections, and never neglected the work, notwithstanding the numerous public offices he was called upon to hold. The model in plaster of his fine bronze bust in the Public Library was presented to the Society by his family, and occupies a prominent position in Franklin Hall. Two of his sons are members of the Society, — one Honorary and one Active.

In the death of Captain William H. Cundy, which occurred at Tampa, Florida, February 19, 1897, the Franklin Typographical Society lost its most loving, its most devoted, its best friend. Others have done as much for the Society in some directions ; in some ways others perhaps have done more ; but considering all that he was to the Society, and all that it was to him, and remembering all that he did for it, we are fully warranted in placing him foremost and above all. He came into the Society June 5, 1852, and he remained in it continuously to the end. He was the leader in the purchase of the burial lot in Mount Hope Cemetery in 1859-60, and solicited the larger part of the subscriptions. He was a member of the committee on the semi-centennial celebration of the Society in Odd Fellows' Hall in 1874, and he presided on that occasion. He was President in 1874 and 1875, and at the September meeting following the death of Hon. Hugh O'Brien in 1895 he was elected Treasurer, a position which he retained up to the time of his death; and it was largely through his advice and activity that the Society now has a home of its own. What he did was so much a labor of love, so much a natural and necessary thing to do, that he of all our members was perhaps the least conscious of the scope and value of his services.

All those deeply interested in the Franklin Typographical Society would be surprised if any facts concerning its benefactors and prominent members were published without mention of the genial, jovial, loving, and beloved Benjamin Penhallow Shillaber, one of the earliest of the famous coterie of American humorists who have done so much to amuse the English-speaking race, and one whose humor was always agreeable and left no sting behind. Besides being the originator of the "Partington Papers," under the nom de plume of Mrs. Partington, which character he made famous, he was an editorial and space writer of originality and interest, a poet of repute whose collected poems in book form were well received by the public generally, and furnished the Society on various occasions with appropriate verse. He was born in Portsmouth, N. H., July 12, 1814, joined the Society, January, 1847, and though not taking an active part in its business, was a stanch supporter and believer in its methods and its work, and died November 24, 1890. On the evening of March 5, 1896, his daughter, Miss Carrie P. Shillaber, favored the Society, on what was designated as "Ladies' Night," the hall being well filled by members and others with their lady friends, with a paper composed of wise and witty sayings from her father's writings, which she called "Partingtonia;" and the matter and her rendition were received with much mirth and hearty applause.

Among the members of the Master Printers' Club of Boston are to be found some of the Society's most valued friends; and should any circumstance sunder the bond of friendship that unites the two Societies, the loss to the Franklin Typographical Society would be well-nigh irreparable.
